Short description of the thesis:

By many linguists spoken language is considered one of the most difficult aspects of language learning. What makes the spoken language difficult is that the foreign language learners in learning to speak a foreign language usually express feelings of anxiety, apprehension and nervousness; therefore many language learners find it difficult to express themselves in spoken language in the target language.

Ernest Hilgard considers anxiety as a psychological construct, commonly described by psychologists as a state of apprehension, a vague fear that is only indirectly associated with an
